Admissions and Enrollment

5.1.3.1 Demonstrate how the admission process for students enrolling in the degree program reflects students’ potential for success in both academic studies and professional practice.

Students enrolling in the Program typically participate in Freshman Orientation. As part of the orientation process the incoming students are informed of the employment opportunities for the graduates. Statistics are shared regarding past graduates, placement rates, and the ability to advance in professional practice.

5.1.3.2 Describe how the admission process for the degree program reflects institution-wide policies as well as the program’s mission, goals, and objectives, including the admission of internal and external transfer students.

The Construction Management major accepts all new applicants that are admitted to the University, and all internal transfers that are in good standing (GPA 2.0 or better) with the University.
