I don’t see that as an issue. Tom and Nanhee are better suited to respond.

Dear Jenn,

A few years back Terry Curtis and I worked on a certificate program in visual anthropology that would have some of our anthropology students taking some CDES courses. One of the courses on our list is CDES 314. However, last semester Tom Welsh informed me that CDES 314 had a prerequisite. He had an anthropology student trying to enroll in the course and was afraid that he wouldn’t be adequately prepared. He was very gracious in allowing the student to take the class anyway.

In order to prevent this from happening again, I was thinking that we should remove CDES 314 from our certificate program and add CDES 222 instead. I thought that I had better run it by you first. Does this seem like a good idea to you? If so, we can begin the process of pushing the change through the curriculum committee.

I don’t think it will affect your enrollments very much at all. I doubt you’d get more than one or two of our students in that class per year.

Thanks for your advice,
Hi Matt and Kathy,

Here’s an email from Tom confirming the change.

Thanks,
Brian

Hi Brian, That's fine. Whatever works best for you. Feel free to send students to me to discuss which course would be best. Another option would be to have both 314 and 222 and have an "either-or" option. -Tom

Hi Tom,

I think that in order to prevent confusion (like what happened with Ronnie) it might be best to just eliminate 314. If we get a student who has the necessary skills and would be a good fit, then I can make a discretionary change.

If this is okay with you, can I ask you to send an email confirming it so can get this through our curriculum committee?

Thanks,
Brian

I think cdes 314 would be more appropriate if the student had the skills needed. It might be better to leave 314 on the books and then both you and I could redirect them to 222 if they didn't have the skills needed for 314. 314 focuses on more visual uses of the web, images, maps, etc. Let me know what you think.
