Join us for a conversation about the reemergence over concern with class status (such as the "white working class voter" in the 2016 election) in broader discourses of American meritocracy and our "boot-strap" society and to discuss how and why class issues have largely remained hidden. We will also talk about how Chico State students with working class backgrounds and to consider the affordances and constraints of students' hidden class statuses for teaching, learning, and community building and membership.

Bring your lunch and join us!
