Little exist on former Mexican guest workers (or braceros) now as elderly former guest workers. This presentation examines their lives today, as well as, their prior experiences as immigrant (guest) workers. Research after the end of the bracero program resulted in analyses that examined former braceros as part of the larger migration of Mexicans. I will examine their post-bracero migration using oral histories and secondary sources to conduct a migration and work history level of analysis. Previous examinations of former braceros examined their lives in the United States while they were still actively working or migrating as guest workers. My examination focuses on their settlement process in the United States, and now as elderly former guest workers.
