For many people, “coming out” as someone who is living with depression can be frightening. But telling our stories can also heal us, and it’s often the first step to getting the help we need. Let’s have a conversation about what depression really looks like, and how we can create a community that supports anyone who is working toward living a more authentic life.

Bring your lunch and join us!