In what ways is violence a part of every American’s life? This semester’s Conversations on Diversity series will focus on what scholars term our “culture of violence.” We anticipate thought-provoking discussions on how violence is reflected in our cultural beliefs, practices, and institutions. We’ll also look at the roles we each play in this “culture of violence” as contributors, participants, and bystanders. Please join us as we explore this issue and as we hear from those on the front lines responding to violence and working to end it.
