

CULTURALLY SUSTAINING PEDAGOGY SPEAKER SERIES

Hosted by the School of Education and Meriam Library at California State University, Chico

“Values First, Skills Second: Culturally Sustaining Pedagogies Across Classrooms”

Casey Phillip Wong

Assistant Professor of Social Foundations of Education,
Educational Policy Studies, Georgia State University

Wednesday, April 17, 2024

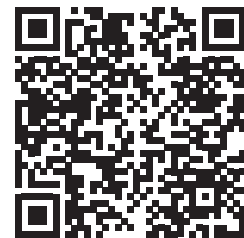

12 p.m. (PST), via Zoom

Wong aims to advance justice by interrogating systems of coloniality, carcerality, and oppression in education through critical feminist, anti-colonial and abolitionist frameworks and by investigating and developing culturally sustaining and strength-based pedagogies to teach and learn otherwise.

He researches and collaborates with communities to affirm, foster, sustain, and revitalize educational institutions and relations that critically center overlapping and interconnected African/Black, Indigenous, Latine/x/a/o, Asian and Pacific Islander communities. This educational work has crucially involved partnering and working directly with county offices of education (e.g., Los Angeles County Office of Education), school districts (e.g., Center Unified School District), teacher preparation programs (e.g., Alder Graduate School of Education), schools (e.g., Oak Hill Elementary School), and educational institutions within the United States and internationally (e.g., Heal the Hood Project in Cape Town, South Africa), to develop curriculum and instruction that address systemic injustices.

His multi-regional and multi-national empirical investigations strive to solve the most intractable educational problems and to prepare the next generation of school leaders, teachers and educators to achieve educational justice through policy and practice guided by state-of-the-art theory, evidence, and careful analysis.

Zoom
Access

Watch party with pizza in
Meriam Library, Room 116
(Research Commons)

This talk is part of the Culturally Sustaining Pedagogy Speaker Series, hosted by the School of Education and Meriam Library and funded by a Student Learning Fee Award. For more information, contact Char Moffit at camoffit@csuchico.edu or Irene Korber at ikorber@csuchico.edu