

University Housing and Food Service (CSU Chico) Roommate Agreement Form

During Opening Week and at any point during the academic year you receive a new roommate, you and your roommates should discuss your shared expectations for living together and complete a Roommate Agreement Form. By establishing ground rules early, roommates increase their chances of having a positive experience!

Set aside some time—at least a half hour—to devote to completing the agreement. By honestly expressing your feelings and reactions to these topics, you will find it easier to understand and empathize with each other during the trials and tribulations of college life. When conflicts arise, revisiting these topics and communicating openly can help resolve disputes before they become unsolvable. If you find yourselves faced with a particularly difficult situation, talk with your roommate first, then your Resident Advisor: it all comes down to respectful communication. Policies described in Living In and your Student Housing License Agreement should be considered during your discussion when appropriate. This agreement will be reviewed in six weeks’ time.

I will not rely on my roommate if I lose my key and will take responsibility for the loss.

Initialed: _____

It is important for each roommate to consider all of the above issues and discuss them with their other roommates for increased understanding before problems may arise. Most roommate conflicts can be prevented by communicating with each other and reaching mutually agreed upon living arrangements. Discuss issues first, and then utilize your Resident Advisor as a resource in reviewing and mediating roommate agreements. Your signing this document indicates that you understand the agreements that were reached.
