INTRODUCTION

1918

This is the seventh edition of R. L. Polk & Co's Chico-Oroville Directory. It represents an energetic, progressive people. The present prosperous conditions of Butte County are the direct result of the energy of its population.

Butte County is situated in the northern and eastern Sacramento Valley, and embraces mountain, foothill and valley land.

Opportunities in Butte County are unlimited. Reasonable prices asked for land, caused by the need for men, and from the fact that irrigation has been but recently introduced, offers a great opening for industries. Nowhere in the United States are the productions more varied, which in itself is insurance against hard times. In the higher altitudes apples are grown, while the rolling foothills are famous for the oranges and olives they produce. Rice fields on the broad plains are a source of curiosity to tourists, and from the present rapid development of this industry, it seems probable that it will equal that of alfalfa and dairy farming, and the extensive grain farming for which Butte County is so well known. All kinds of deciduous fruits are grown.

The establishment of Federal experimental gardens, and of a great experimental rice station, assures even further development along these lines.

Transportation facilities are excellent. The County is traversed by a main line of the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroads. A branch line of the Southern Pacific connects Oroville with the Central Pacific Railroad. The County is also crossed by the Northern Electric Railway. The Butte County Railway, extending from Chico to Sterling City, connect the towns along the Magalia Ridge. The Butte & Plumas Railway connects Oroville with Berry Creek. The eastern markets are made accessible to fruit growers of Butte County by the Western Pacific Railway.

The abundance of raw materials has placed Butte County among the leading manufacturing Counties of interior California, and the mineral and timber wealth of the County affords an opening for many new industries.

The present Directory is in keeping with the progress of the community, and has grown and expanded with the people its represents, although Directory making has been especially difficult this year. The shortage of help and the rise in the cost of labor and materials, have made Directory making almost impossible.

Anticipating these conditions, the publishers of the Chicago Directory have suspended publication until conditions adjust themselves, but the publishers of the Chico-Oroville and Butte County Directory, with complete confidence in themselves, in the work, and in the people, have overcome these difficulties, and have issued one of the most accurate and complete Directories published.

The systematic and thorough organization necessary for a work of this nature, have been developed by the publishers, and put to good advantage in the publication of this Directory.

Respectfully,

R. L. POLK & CO.
