English 222 Syllabus

Note 1: Every effort will be made to stick to the schedule on the syllabus, but it is likely that there will be some variation in the actual presentation schedule. Precisely what will be on the test will be discussed in class.

Note 2: The last scheduled item “Spelling” will not be taught en masse at the end of the class, but rather will be interspersed throughout the course---as it should be for pedagogical reasons.

Note 3: Materials relating to the topics below will also be interspersed throughout the course as well as posted on the net.

Note 4: At various points in the course when you have the background to deal easily with the material, information on developmental sequences will be introduced.

Note 5: Throughout the course teaching materials, both ESL and non-ESL, relating to the sounds and spelling of English, to English word parts and word formation, and to the linguistic structures of various genre found in reading and subsequently writing activities. The prime focus will be on recognition and evaluation of what it is that these materials were to designed to teach.
