

Agriculture Internships

California State University Chico
College of Agriculture

An internship is not required to graduate from the College of Agriculture, however, it is highly recommended. Internships are a great way to connect classroom knowledge to real-world experience. In an internship you have the opportunity to build your resume, network with industry leaders, identify new interests and demonstrate understanding.

Frequently Asked Questions

What If I don't already have an internship? Check out opportunities on Handshake, Calagjobs.com or on our College of Agriculture website. You can also talk to faculty. Although it's ultimately your responsibility to secure the internship, the friendly staff in the Student Success and Retention Office (SSRO) can help provide suggestions.

How do I enroll in an internship? Internships must be approved for academic appropriateness and potential hazards or risks associated with placement. The approval process will occur after you've found your position, but prior to registration for the course. Once your paperwork is approved, you will be placed into the correct section by the SSRO office.

Does it need to be a paid internship? Your internship can be paid or unpaid however there is additional paperwork that is required for unpaid internships. This paperwork requires more time to process and so the deadline is earlier for unpaid internships.

How many hours do I need to intern? That is up to you. You earn units based on the hours devoted to your internship over the duration of the semester. (Ex) 1 unit = 45 hours; 2 units = 90 hours; 3 units = 135 hours. You can earn up to 6 units of internship.

Is there coursework in addition to the internship hours? In addition to the hours that you complete with your internship site, there are assignments on Blackboard.
