- Chosen Family – Rina Sawayama
- Chosen Family – Rina Sawayama (Featuring Elton John)

Rina Sawayama, a Japanese-born singer who has lived in Britain for 26 years, is among the three contenders for the Rising Star prize at this year’s BRIT Awards after she successfully pushed to change eligibility rules.

Sawayama, whose debut album “Sawayama” was named one of 2020’s best by music magazine NME, had previously said she could not be considered for British award categories at the BRITs or for the Mercury Prize because she did not hold a British passport.
The British Phonographic Industry (BPI) stipulates that solo artists must have British or Irish nationality to enter the competition and submit official documentation of citizenship. Bands must include 30% British or Irish citizens, as long as more than half of their members live in the UK.

The singer said she had several conversations with the British Phonographic Industry (BPI), which organizes the awards, and the body confirmed music artists who have been permanent UK residents for more than five years would now be eligible.
