Chico State is a “minority majority” campus, with only 44% of our student population identifying as Caucasian. Fifty-two percent come from families where neither parent holds a four-year degree and over half qualify for the Pell Grant, a common indicator of poverty. This panel discussion will explore a myriad of experiences of first generation college students at Chico. Students will share their stories of challenge and resilience, and will reveal what resources they used to help break down the barriers they’ve encountered while trailblazing their way toward a college degree.
