Overview

This document is intended to provide Faculty Members with procedures to follow in the event of an emergency involving a student when traveling abroad. For the purpose of this document, any international travel by students who are led by Faculty is referred to as study abroad. Potential emergencies include, but are not limited to:

• Serious Illness or Injury
• Sexual Assault or Rape
• Death of a Student
• Missing Student or Kidnapping
• Political Unrest, Natural Disaster or Terrorist Attack
• Arrest or Crimes by a Student

Preparation

It is essential that Faculty members are prepared for emergency situations when leading students in study abroad programs. The Faculty member, or designee, should conduct an orientation for students prior to departing for the program. The orientation should include discussion of:

• The “Country Specific Information” and any “Travel Alert” details for the host country.
• The standards of conduct in the host country.
• The risks associated with traveling to and from the host country as well as the risks inherent in staying in the host country.
• The need for students to create an emergency contact card listing the names, email and phone numbers of their emergency contacts. The card should also include the emergency contact numbers (police, hospital, fire department, US Embassy) for the host country if available at the time of the orientation.
• Students will need to secure foreign travel insurance available via the Office of Risk Management. This will be taken care of by the department, but additional information from the student may be necessary (i.e. emergency contact information).

Prior to departing, the Faculty member should have students complete an Emergency Contact Form (obtain from Risk Management) which requests students’ emergency contact information as well as their medical insurance information. If the Faculty member and students are not traveling together, the Faculty member should collect the travel itinerary for each student. If more than one Faculty member will be leading the students, each director should retain copies of the student’s information if traveling separately. The above information should also be provided to the appropriate department AND Risk Management prior to departure. If possible, students should be given a way to contact the Faculty member at all times throughout the trip. It is also recommended that each participant registers via the US State Department's Smart Traveler Enrollment Program.

Course of Action

In the event of an emergency, the Faculty member’s first responsibility is to safeguard the safety and well-being of the program participants. The director may need to combine efforts with the appropriate representatives of the host site. Collectively, the Faculty member and host site should attempt to remove the student or students from immediate danger (if applicable). They may also need to contact the appropriate local authorities depending upon the type of emergency. Follow up should also be provided to the Office of International Education so that the emergency and the response can be documented. Dependent upon the severity of the emergency, the Faculty member may need to direct any media related questions to the campus Director of Public Affairs and Publications.
