Women of Color Students’ Experiences with Campus Sexual Assault: An Intersectional Analysis

In her talk, Dr. Harris will explore the concept of intersectionality and how some education scholars and practitioners have mis/used the term in their work. To demonstrate the possibilities of intersectionality in education, Harris shares her current research that explores how intersecting systems of domination, specifically racism and sexism, influence Women of Color undergraduate student survivors’ experiences with campus sexual assault. Harris’ talk has implications for individuals who are interested in using intersectionality in their research and practice, for educators who aim to better prevent and respond to campus sexual assault, and for all those working toward a more equitable campus environment.

Dr. Jessica C. Harris is an assistant professor of higher education in the Graduate School of Education and Information Studies at UCLA. Through her research, Jessica focuses on race, racism, and its intersections in higher education.
