In late November, the Federal Department of Education issued a new set of proposed rules on Title IX regarding the responsibilities of primary and secondary schools, as well as universities, to address sexual assault and harassment.

A significant amount of media attention has made it clear that these proposed rule changes are somewhat controversial.

As mandated by law, the public has until January 28, 2019 to provide feedback, which can be submitted through the Federal eRulemaking Portal:

Send your students and come yourself! This training will provide attendees with the tools to help them deliver information-rich comments that are more likely to have an impact on this very important regulatory proposal.
